Groups of people with the same culture and customs chose to form communities.

People chose to live near natural resources like water, forest, rich soil or wildlife.

Some groups chose a location of a community because of the climate.

For example, some farmers need warm and wet weather.

When roads and railroads were built, communities were built near them or along their paths.

Usually communities started as small villages and after many years some grew into large urban cities.

Communities have also been created near businesses or government organizations.

There are many different ways that communities begin. Usually communities begin as small groups and then grow into large communities with many citizens.
