The Battle of Bunker Hill took place on June 17, 1775. The rebels were ready to drive the British out of the Colonies, especially Boston. Boston was the only safe place for the British. The only way out of Boston was by sea. The rebel army began to build walls of earth or rocks to protect themselves on Breed's Hill. They also intended to take Bunker Hill, but the British attacked before they completed their plans. The rebels did not give up until they ran out of bullets. The famous saying "Don't fire until you see the whites of their eyes" came from this battle. Although the rebels were defeated, they killed over 1,000 Redcoats.

The Second Continental Congress chose a committee of colonists to write a declaration stating the colonists' beliefs about independence. Among this group were Ben Franklin, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson. This declaration had three main parts. The first part, called the preamble, stated why colonists had no other option but to form a new nation. The second part of the declaration gave their views about the new government. The third section of the declaration was the largest part and told of the complaints about British rule over the colonies. The Declaration of Independence was approved on July 4, 1776. This declaration stated the colonies were independent from

The Battle of Saratoga was actually two different battles. It consisted of the Battle of Freeman's Farm and the Battle of Bemus Heights. The Battle of Saratoga was the turning point of the Revolutionary War. On October 17, 1777, General Burgoyne, the British commander, had to surrender to General Gates because they were so badly beaten. This victory proved to the world that the Americans were serious and strong enough to defeat the mighty British Army. When France heard of the American victory, they recognized the colonies as the United States of America and put their support behind the young nation.

The winter at Valley Forge was one of the darkest times in the American Revolution. George Washington and his troops were encamped for the winter of 1777–78 at Valley Forge near Philadelphia. Thousands of soldiers were barefoot and without warm clothing in the bitter cold. There was also a shortage of food even though Washington repeatedly asked for supplies. Many of the soldiers deserted or died, and even some horses starved to death. Even through these harsh conditions, the soldiers never lost their drive to fight for independence. In the spring, the troops were tougher and even more disciplined than before. In June 1778, the army fought the British to a stalemate, with neither side emerging victorious.

The surrender at Yorktown ended the Revolutionary War. The British General Cornwallis had encamped in Yorktown with his troops. The Chesapeake Bay made it easy for the British to bring in their ships with supplies. Since Yorktown was located on Chesapeake Bay, the American troops led by Washington surrounded Cornwallis' army. The French army joined the Americans. The French then cut off British supplies and took Chesapeake Bay. The British were surrounded! There was no battle, but Cornwallis was trapped. After several weeks, Cornwallis surrendered on October 19, 1781. This was the end of the Revolutionary War, even though a few minor skirmishes occurred over the next two years.
